"Playing the Field" is a retrospective exhibition of furniture, furnishing, process drawings and sketchbooks, that highlight the bridging of craft, art and design--at trend that became full-blown in the American furniture market during the 1980s and 1990s. A floodgate opened, allowing for the present proliferation of designed objects in places like Target and Pottery Barn; with companies such as Umbra, Emeco, Kartell and Copco; and designers like Michael Graves, Karim Rashid, and Philadelphia University's own Josh Owen.

Strawbridge's Department Store is the presenting sponsor. Wilsonart International and the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts have provided additional support.
